Memorial Services to the Late Emperor of Germany

AT OPERA HOUSE LAST NIGHT.

Fine Music and Eloquent Address German and English-The House Beautifully Decorated for the Occasion-Resolutions.

Pursuant to the arrangements herete fore made by the combined German so cieties of Wheeling, religious, social and musical, the German-American citizens of the city last night celebrated the ninety-first birthday of the late Kaiser Wilhelm, of Germany, by memorial services in his honor, in the Opera House. vices in his honor, in the Opera House. Not a small number of Americans born united with their adopted fellow-citizens in doing honor to the man who unified Germany and raised her to her present proud place among the Christian nations of the earth. The house was comfortably filled, a few persons standing in addition to every sent being occupied.

The house was profusely and beautifully decorated, growing plants, blooming flowers, a wealth of evergreens, the national colors of America and Germany, and portraits of the Emperor, with other appropriate pictures, being used with rare good taste. The credit for the neatness and impressive character of the draping and decoration is due to Mr. William Krieger, the chairman of the committee, and Mr. John Liphardt, who assisted in designing and arranging the adornments. HANDSOME DECORATIONS.

who assisted in designing and arranging the adornments.

In the middle of the stage was a large portrait of the dead Kaiser, drapedin the American flag, mingled with the emblems of mourning, and above it the German Imperial colors. To the left, was a representation of the national monument, Germania, and to the right a photograph of the Emperor, taken from life several years ago. Overhead were small American flags draped in black crepe, and about the balcony similar flags relieved the sombre black. The singing societies, officers, commitmar mags reneved the sombre black.

The singing societies, officers, committees, Mayor Scabright, Hon, A. W.
Campbell and other prominent citizens occupied places on the platform. All wore the Kaiser's favorite corn flower.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—Your presence here this evening evinces your interest in the Fatherland. The interest you have all taken in this occasion, to make it a success, is deserving of the thanks of those who suggested this idea; and those gentlemen who are members of the various committees and have labored hard to makethe occasion pleasant and memorable, deserve your thanks in turn.

REV. MR. ULFERT. Mr. Ulfert spoke, with a rapid, nervous utterance, the musical sentences of his mother tongue. His remarks were patriotic and eloquent, and were received with frequent signs of approval on the part of the audience. He said that though born in Germany, or descended from those who were, the citizens of German antivity or lineage were as cood Americans, as patriotic, as deas good Americans, as patriotic, as de-voted, as true, as those born beneath the Stars and Stripes. They honored the dead Kaiser as a manly man, a brave soldier, a just and considerate ruler, and a Christian. They rejoiced at what he

The accident of his birth, the traditions of his house, the severity and isolation of his early military life, the weakness of his brother, all these conspired to precipitate him into the deplerable collision with the people of 1848; and even those who thought and spoke of him as a monster came at last to know that he had a great soul, that he sincerely loved his people, and that his paternal instincts and sympathies were as wide as the nd sympathies were as wide as the

We must measure kings as we do other men, by their environments. To be born a Hohenzollern prince, as far back as 1797, and to have winessed the flood of demoralization let loose over the continent of Europe by the French revolution; to have seen the product of that revolution, Napoleon, like another Attila, scourging Germany, and especially his own ancestral house and soil, was not an environment out of which to create an enthusiasm for popular sover-

Just as the stream cannot rib higher than the fountain—just as we cannot put new wine into old bottles—as the French revolution clearly prove an American form of government or an oppular form of government, would have been little better than a farce of Gormany. The conditions for a condition of the stream of the Germany. The conditions for a sel governing people cannot be sudden invoked into being. They must accoming invoked into being. They must accu-mulate little by little. A wild outburst on the part of frantic protest is not a manent emancipation from oppres-. Even here in America we know sion. Even there in America we show that an unprepared people, although environed by long established free institutions, and upheld by widespread sympathy and support, cannot be enranchised with impunity.

The German people, with all their prestige and progress in science and chised with impunity.

The German people, with all their prestige and progress in science and literature, had their roots still deep in the past until a few years ago. They inherited every form of petty government from their feudalistic history. No land was ever so cursed with it. No people were ever so runt by the contending wars of kingeraft and priesteraft. Their geographical divisions and jealousies of each other were more numerous than their dialects. Notwithstanding all they had suffered they could not be wholly their dialects. Notwithstanding all they had suffered they could not be wholly united, much less assimilated. Had Emperor William not been raised up, and along with him Bismarck, Germany would still be a land of petty potentates, ruled over by men of small ideas, bent on their personal aggrandizement at the expense of the people.

Mr. Campbell here glanced at the situation in Germany prior to the war of 1806, between Prussia and Austria, and showed what resulted from that war. But notwithstanding the great results of that war, he said that even then a United Germany was impossible, owing a United Germany was impossible, owing to the jealousies of the South German States, and the northern confederation was only a loose jointed affair—a sort of defensive alliance and customs band. It took the white heat of the war with It took the white heat of the war with France to bring; all the States into the present confederacy. This was the achievement of the greatest monarch and the greatest prime minister of modern times. Despite, repeated, attempted assistnations, these two men of iron purpose had never faltered through years in their hurculean task. They conquered the petty potentates within and the larger ones outside of Germany; and the former task was almost as difficult as the latter, Germany has thus been advanced immeasurably tempted assistations, these two men of iron purpose had never faltered through years in their hurculean task. In the day when the full fruition of this unity comes, no name in the long list of her rulers will be so dear to the children of the Fatherland, as that of Emperor William. It will be told how the grand old veteran went with his soldiers to the front at the first tocsin of war, and how like the plume of Henry of Navarre his snow white head could be seen amidst the surge of battle, pressing forward amidst shot and shell; and how at night he slept on his iron cot and messed as a soldier in the camp; how he visited the wounded in the Lospitals and gave them freely of his own supplies, and how he hushed all noise, even the music at his own headquarters, so the music at his own headquarters, so that they might not be disturbed; how that they might not be disturbed; how he reverently and modestly expressed himself in all his dispatches to his queen,—always keeping himself out of sight. These are the traits, with his simplicity of life in peace, that have so endeared his memory to the German people and cause all nations to award his name unusual honor.

The remarks of Mr. Campbell were especially well received, being frequently interspersed with unusually hearty applause. The orchestra pieces which followed, like the opening loyertare, was beautifully done, the difficult music being handled to the best effect by the opera house orchestra, assisted by Prof. Schockey.

Rev. Mr. Ziegelmeier then made an appropriate and eloquent brief speech in

It is to be borne in mind that the chorus, unaccustomed to singing together, had but three days to rehearse the songs selected for the occasion, and the orchestra was similarly limited in its opportunities to familiarize itself with the music assigned to it, all of the highest order, requiring more than average skill to render it.

and Fate of a Young Girl through a A sad case of desertion and destitution has come to light-the same old story of woman's blind trust and man's inhunanity, with death as the sequel. Last summer there came to this city rom Parkersburg a family named Costello, consisting of a widowed mother and four daughters, one aged about 20, another about 19 and the other two 11 and four daughters, one aged and so, another about 19 and the other two 11 and 13 respectively. The sad story an Interaction of the two 11 Interactions and the other two 11 Interactions of the two the second daughter, Isora by name. While living in Parkersburg she formed an attachment for Lewis Corsey, and, relying on his promise to marry her, she yielded to the tempter. Corsey was a brakeman on the Baltimore & Ohio road between Parkersburg and Grafton. He was a native and resident of Athens county, Ohio. When the family came here Isora secured a situation in one of the hotels, and the eldest daughter found employment in acigar factory, the two daughters remained at home to assist their mother. Their home was at No. 146 Seventeenth street. The house was not a comfortable home. On the two older daughters devolved the main support of the family.

According to the story of the mother According to the story of the mother whose daughter now lies in the grave, Corsey, after marriage, became a burden on the family of his wife. He made their poor abode his lodging place. Occasionally he would go out on a Hempfield run as a substitute, but the few dollars he earned on these trips were spent in dissipation. Practically he contributed nothing to the support of the injured woman and the family.

On Saturday, March 3, Izora was delivered of a boy baby. Her condition had made it imperative sometime before for her to give up her position in the hotel. An election was then gone into for directors and the following named gentlemen chosen: Hon, C. D. Hubbard; Captain John McLure, H. G. Lazear, Joseph Speidel, and William Thaw and Thomas Messler, representatives of the Pennsylvania and Pan Handle systems. The only change made in the directors was the substitution of Mr. Speidel for Mr. M. Reilly. This was brought about by a demand on the part of this county, one of the largest stockholders, that it have a representative in the Board, and Mr. Speidel was the member of the Board of Commissioners chosen for the place. Mr. Reilly has been a director since the road was first started, and has been one of the most valued members.

Deprived of the support that had been afforded by Izora, the family was further afflicted by the sickness of other members; yet Corsey failed to extend any assistance. Instead, soon after his wife had borne him a son, he left the city. Izora was stricken with a fever, and imployed her mother to write to Corsey for assistance. This was done, and in response there came a telegram to the physician who was attending the girl, askiny if it was true that she had a fever. nrst started, and has been one of the most valued members.
